ABSTRACT

In the present scenario, there are still many parts in the country and abroad where women do not have proper rights in the society. They are considered inferior to men, so we need to give women their rights and empower women. Injustice, gender bias and inequality cannot be removed from the society without women empowerment. If women are not empowered, they cannot create their own identity. For the development of any country and state, it is necessary that first of all the gender discrimination with women should be stopped. After this, they should be provided opportunities for development and advancement in various fields, so that women can develop. If opportunities are provided to women in various areas of development, those areas always move towards progress. If the development of women is done at the right time, then the development of the house, family, state and country is ensured. It is said that children are the future of the country and the development of children is linked with women. Because the first teacher of the child is their mother. By learning from the mother, the child grows up and one day contributes to the development of the country. Through this research paper, the schemes and necessary steps taken by the Chhattisgarh government and the central government are to be studied for the empowerment and development of women.

Introduction

The position of men in Indian society has always been higher than women traditionally, due to which there has been discrimination in Indian traditional societies. From the birth of the girl till her death, her condition has been second-class. The difference between son and daughter can be clearly seen in the family. The prevalence of dowry system is also a major cause of female harassment. In the Hindu Succession Law, women do not get their share even though they have equal rights in the father's property. Similarly, we are aware of many examples of low wages being paid despite equal work compared to men, daughter getting less importance in terms of education than son, molestation of women at work place, etc. All this is not only a hindrance to the upliftment of women but also prevents them from being empowered at par with men. The status of women and their empowerment in the state of Chhattisgarh has been studied in this research paper.
